9

Bhadd’eka,ratta Sutta
The Discourse on the One Who Delights in the Auspicious Oneness | M 131
or, The Discourse on a Good Night of Mental Oneness
Theme: Living here and now
Translated by Piya Tan ©2004

1 Meaning(s) of bhadd’eka,ratta

1.1 THE SUTTA TITLE. The Sutta title is puzzling. Bodhi, in his Majjhima translation note, concludes with the interesting notion that bhadd’eka,ratta is “a term coined by the Buddha himself to describe a certain aspect of development.”1 This Sutta is essentially about the practice of mindfulness through the cultivation of insight (vipassanā) by watching mental states as each arises through a night of meditation.2

The term bhadd’eka,ratta is easily resolved as bhadda (“auspicious, fortunate, good”) + eka (“one, oneness”) + ratta (“delighted, rejoicing (in); “night; (figurative) “time”). The word bhadda is straightforward. The second element, eka, usually means “one,” but here probably has an abstract sense of “oneness.” The most difficult component is the last one, ratta, which is polysynthetic. Clearly, there is a wordplay here, characteristic of the meditation language in the early suttas.3 We will now briefly look at each of these components.

1.2 BHAJADA. The word bhadda is common and has many meanings: “good, excellent, noble, worthy, pious; fortunate, auspicious, happy, blest” (Childers’ DPL). Although the word is polysemic, here it refers to the wholesome practice of a meditator, and as such is best rendered as “wholesome,” or more simply “good” or “auspicious.”

An important clue on the meaning of bhadda is found in the (Cattāro) Padhāna Sutta (A 4.14), where the “exertion of guarding” (anurakkha-p, padhāna) is defined by the Buddha, thus: “Here, bhikkhus, a monk guards the auspicious (bhaddaka) sign of concentration when it has arisen…”4 The Aṅguttara Commentary defines bhaddaka, simply as “obtained” (laddhaka) (AA 3:20). The Ṭīkā, however, gives more details, saying:

Bhaddakan ti abhaddakānāṁ nīvaraṇādi,pāpa,dhammānāṁ vikkhambhanena rāga,vigamena ekanta, hitatā dullabhātā ca bhaddakām sundaram. Na hi aññāṁ samādhi,nimittāṁ evam dullabhāṁ rāgassa uju,vipaccanikā,bhūtām atthi.

Bhaddaka means beautiful, by way of the suppression of such inauspicious evil states such as the hindrances, and auspicious by way of the singular benefit, difficult to obtain, by way of the ridding of lust. For a direct knowledge of the samadhi-sign is not difficult to obtain as such, when there is a direct opposition to lust. (AAṬ: Be 2239)

Here we see a close connection between bhaddaka = bhaddeka and samadhi, which also fits the context of the Bhaddeka,ratta Suttas.

1.3 EKA

1.3.1 The word eka means “one,” but we can also include related senses or connotations, such as “being unified.” In other words, eka has both a literal sense as a number, as well as a figurative sense, meaning “unified.” This helps us in understanding that the phrase “one-pointedness” should not, at least, need not, be taken literally, but in the sense that the dhyānic mind is “unified, integrated.”

In fact, in the suttas, we often find eka in meditation contexts always meaning either the noun, “oneness, unification (of mind)” (ekaggatā) or the past participle, “integrated (of mind), withdrawn (from mental hindrances)” (ekodi,bhūta). Take for example, “When he was seated, secluded, meditating in 1 M:NB 1343 f n.1210 (2005).

2 For another possible interpretation, see Samiddhi S (S 1.20), SD 21.4 (1).
3 For other examples and a study, see Language and discourse, SD 26.11.
4 A 4.14.5/2:17 @ SD 10.2.

http://dharmafarer.org
(mental) oneness” (ekaggassa nisinnassa pavivittassa jhāyino, Tha 920). And again, “(mentally) integrated, he should strike down the darkness (of ignorance)” (ekodi, bhūto vihane tamam so, Sn 975), where ekodi, bhūto is glossed as “a one-pointed mind” (ekagga, citto, SnA 574).

Contextually, here eka (instead of the more philosophical ekatta, “oneness”) has the sense of “mental oneness,” “mental stillness,” or “mental concentration.” Eka, as used here, as such, is a synecdoche for samadhi (oneness of mind) (samādhi), or even dhyana (jhāna). It has a broad sense ranging from samadhi to dhyana. Such a non-technical usage of eka also reflects the earliness of the term; hence, the apparent difficulty of explaining this poetic meditational term in a technical way.6

1.3.2 The Ariya, vāsa Sutta 2 (A 10.20) defines the clear comprehension of an arhat that of being “guarded by [in] the one” (ek’ rakkhra), that is, “Here, bhikshus, a monk is mentally accomplished by being guarded with mindfulness.”7 The Commentary explains here that “whether he is walking, standing, sleeping, or awake, he is always mindful, with knowledge and vision present.”8 (AA 5:8)

In terms of meditation, then, the “one” (eka) here can also refer to samadhi (samādhi), even dhyana (jhāna) itself, and the kind of mindfulness that comes from it. This is most probably the meaning of eka in the enigmatic term bhadd’eka, rattta, so that it reads, “the one who has delighted [who delights] in the auspicious one [oneness].” This then refers to one who delights in dhyana meditation, and who lives fully mindfully as a result. We might even say here that it refers to an arhat who often dwells in dhyana.9

1.3.3 The Migajāla S 1 (S 56.63) has another important application of the word eka, that is, in the sense of a “lone dweller” (eka, vihārī), where “dweller” (vihārī) is a synonym for “practitioner.” Here, “one” (eka) is polysemous, referring both to meditating so that we attain “oneness” (ekatta) of mind, that is, samadhi or dhyana for the purpose of attaining non-return or arhathood. In short, it refers to a solitary practitioner, one who looks directly into his mind of calm and clarity.

Such a practice also entails our living a celibate life; hence, the monastic life is also called the “holy life” (brahma, cariya), or the “perfect” (brahma) life for mental cultivation, awakening and liberation. In short, the monastic life of a celibate life of meditation.10 However, a lay practitioner, too, is said to be one who “delights in the auspicious oneness” (bhadd’eka, rattta) when he practises meditation for the sake of attaining dhyana, or even for some level of mindfulness, for the sake of attaining at least streamwinning.11

1.3.4 Hence, in the Sutta title, bhadd’eka, rattta, we can (and should) take eka as alluding to “oneness, single-mindedness” (ekatta), here meaning samadhi or mental concentration, that is, mindfulness by way of wise attention (yoniso manasikāra) or, where the mental hindrances are overcome, the attainment of dhyana. It is clear here, however, mindfulness is meant as the mediator is exhorted to be mindful of the “present moment,” that is, whatever is arising and passing in the mind. The awareness here is that of the process (impermanence), not the contents of the mind (whether it is past, present or future). [1.3]

In fact, the Majjhima Commentary on the Sutta explains bhadd’eka, rattta as “delighting in the ‘one’ (or oneness) that is auspicious, that is, the mind’s accomplishment in devotion to insight” (MA 5:1).12 It should be noted here that “insight” (vipassanā) here does not refer to any system of meditation (certainly

---

5 A synecdoche is a figure of speech in which a part is used to refer to the whole, eg “the robe” for monkhood, or where a whole refers to a part (common in political language), eg “Kosala conquered Magadha.”

6 On eka as referring to the celibate life of meditation, as in eka, vihārī, “the solitary dweller,” see Migajāla S 1 (S 56.63) + SD 44.6 (3.1).

7 A 10.20.6 + SD 43.15 (2.3).

8 Ten’ ev’assa carato ca tiṭṭhato ca suttassa ca jāgarassa ca satataṃ samitaṃ r āna, dassanaṃ paccupatthitam hotiti vuccati (AA 5:8).

9 A beautiful synonym for bhadd’eka, rattta given in Venāga, pura S (A 3.63) is the “heavenly great high couch” (dibba uccā, sayana mahā, sayana) of the Buddha, ie, his dwelling in dhyana, so that he is truly happy whether he sits, walks, stands or reclines (A 3.63.5), SD 21.1.

10 See Migajāla S 1 (S 56.63) + SD 44.6 (3.1).

11 On streamwinning, see (Anicca) Cakkhu S (S 25.1), SD 16.7.

12 Bhadd’eka, rattta ti vipassanāmuyoga, samannāgatattā bhaddakassa eka, rattassa.

http://dharmafarer.org
not the Insight Meditation of our times, but simply to the wisdom that leads one to see true reality and liberation.

1.4 RATTA

1.4.1 Literal meaning. Ratta has a wide range of meanings. Let us first look at its literal meaning as “night.” In his Majjhima comparative study, Analayo, the Sanskrit title of this sutra reads bhadraka,-rātrīya, or bhadraka,rātriya, all of which translate as “a good night” or “an auspicious night.” The Chinese Āgama version transcribes the same title as 背地羅帝, corresponding to to dīgha, ratta, which translates as “a good night” or “an auspicious night.”

Bodhi, in his Majjhima translation note, says that “ratta and ratti could be taken to represent respectively either Skt rātra and rātrī (= night) or Skt rakta and rakti (= attachment). The Central Asian Skt version, the Skt title at the head of the Tibetan version and the Tibetan translation itself all use bhadrakarātrī. This confirms the identification of ratta with “night”: the change from -e- to -a- can be understood as an attempt to convert a difficult reading into a more familiar one.”

1.4.2 Figurative meaning. The word ratta, meaning “night,” is often used in a figurative sense to mean “time,” such as “for a long time” (dīgha, ratta). The best example is surely that of rattaññū, literally, “one who knows the nights,” or more idiomatically, “most recognized, of long standing, senior” especially as an epithet of the first saint after the Buddha, Aññā Koṇḍañña, “the seniormost of the monks.”

If we accept this figurative sense as being applicable to ratta in bhadd'eka, ratta, then we can render it as “the one of long-standing in the auspicious oneness.” This translation evokes the devotion and experience of a meditator in his practice, especially of dhyana and its use in the attaining of liberation.

1.4.3 Sanskrit usages

1.4.3.1 Ratta (Skt rakta) is also the past participle of rañjati = rajjati (“to delight in,” used in a wholesome sense). The Sanskrit-English Dictionary (SED), under rakta (page 861), amongst its meanings, gives “attached to or devoted to, fond of, beloved, dear, lovely, pleasant, sweet.” Hence, we can render ratta in bhadd'eka, ratta as “delighting in, fond of seeing it as dear or lovely (in the mental sense).”

---

13 What we call Insight Meditation today comprises systems based on the teachings of Jetavana Sayadaw of Burma (modern Myanmar), and promoted by his pupil, Mahasi Sayadaw, and by the famous lay teacher U Ba Khin, which is promoted by the Indian lay teacher Goenka. I am not evaluating the system here, as I find those Vipassana methods work harmoniously with the forest meditation of Ajahn Chah, both of which are taught at the Minding Centre, Singapore, benefitting both Buddhists and non-Buddhists alike.

14 See PED: ratta & ratti also SED: rakta.
16 Cat no 816 V3 in SHT (Sanskrithandschriften aus den Turfanfunden) 3:32 (1971); cf also R2.
17 Fragments no 3 b3 in Minayeff & Oldenburg (Buddhist Texts from Kashgar and Nepal) 1983:243.
18 Fragment no 4 b1 in Minayeff & Oldenburg 1983.
19 MĀ 165 = T1.696c7.
22 Tibetan versions no 313 = mdo sde sa 161b2, no 617 = rgyud ’bum ba 56a7, and no 974 = gzungs ’dus vam 90a3.
23 V 3:105,29; D 1:206,1, 2:283,23; M 3:115,19; S 1:59,24; A 1:142,15*; Sn 335; Tha 768; Pv 25.11.
25 The negative sense is more common, eg “Those dyed in lust fall back into the current” (ye rāga, rattānupatanti sotāna, D 347a).
1.4.3.2 As already noted here, \textit{ratta} in the sense of “delighting (in)” is usually found in the Pali suttas in the negative sense. However, it is possible, poetically at least, to use \textit{ratta} in a positive sense. After all, if a “desire” is directed toward something positive, especially here, we can take it in a positive sense, that is, “delighting in (the auspicious oneness).”

1.4.3.3 The Pali \textit{ratta} is cognate with the Sanskrit \textit{rakta}, which in turn comes from the verb \textit{rañjati} (from the √RAÑJ, “to colour”). The SED, under \textit{rañj}, includes meanings such as “to glow, illuminate, shine bright,” usages which often go back to pre-Buddhist times (such as in the Vedas). As such, we can also take \textit{ratta} in a figurative sense, to mean “to shine, etc.”

1.5 CONCLUSIONS. Putting all these textual and traditional clues together, we can say that bhadd’eka’ratta can mean “one good night” of true blissful stillness, the joy of dhyana. Or, we could, more technically, read it as “delighting in the fortune (or blessing) of oneness,” that is, enjoying mental focus or samadhi, deep in blissful meditation.

Using the calm clarity of mind, we are truly able to see the rise and fall of our minds. Either way—dhyana or mindfulness—it evokes a sense of the joy of a meditator sitting deep into the night, “a silent night, holy night” in the truest sense of the word! From the Sutta context and also in keeping with the contemplative tone of early Buddhism, we can, as such, safely say that the translation of this key word that best reflects all this would be

“one who delights [has found delight] in the auspicious oneness” [1.4.3.1], or more poetically, as

“the one who shines in the blessed oneness” [1.4.3.3], or more broadly, as

“the one of long-standing in the auspicious oneness” [1.4.2].

It is unlikely that we can ever directly render this pregnant term, bhadd’eka’ratta, with an exact English translation. This is a problem of the word (anuvyañjana), which reminds us of the vital need of a discourse of the spirit (attha) from an experienced teacher to share his insights on such terms with other. The Dharma, in other words, can never be fully and effectively transmitted through academic or book learning, but needs the direct transmission of living Dharma teachers and, above all, a personal taste of the “auspicious oneness.”

2 Origins of the Bhadd’eka,ratta texts

2.1 THE BHADDEKARATTA SUTTAS. The heart of this sutta is a short verse, the Bhaddeka,ratta Gāthā [3, 10], which is well known. There are altogether four suttas entitled Bhaddeka,ratta, namely:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bhaddeka,ratta Sutta</th>
<th>131/3:187-189</th>
<th>the Buddha</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ānanda Bhaddeka,ratta Sutta</td>
<td>132/3:190-190 f</td>
<td>Ānanda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mahā Kaccāna Bhaddeka,ratta Sutta</td>
<td>133/3:192-199</td>
<td>Mahā Kaccāna</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lomasak’aṅgiya Bhaddeka,ratta Sutta</td>
<td>134/3:199-202</td>
<td>the Buddha</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Bhaddekaratta verse is also found in the Netti-p,pakaraṇa (Nett 149) and the Apadāna (Lomasak’aṅgiya Therāpadāna, Ap 545.20-23/506).

In the Bhaddeka,ratta Sutta (M 131) (our sutta) and the Lomasak’aṅgiya Bhaddekaratta Sutta (M 134), the Buddha himself elaborates on three and a half lines [abeg]. Ānanda repeats verbatim the Buddha’s explanations in the Ānanda Bhaddeka,ratta Sutta. From this selective explanation, we can immediately surmise that the other stanza lines expand on these selected lines by way of internal commentary.

Mahā Kaccāna, too, elaborates on the same three and a half lines, but gives a more detailed explanation in the Mahā Kaccāna Bhaddeka,ratta Sutta. While the Buddha explains the verse using the framework of the 5 aggregates (pañca-k, khandha), Mahā Kaccāna frames his explanations around the 12 sense-fields (dvādas’āyatana), that is, the 6 internal sense-bases (sense organs) and the 6 external sense-objects. The common underlying element in the sense-experiences is consciousness (viññāṇa), that is, those in the grasp of sensual desire, and those free from it. As such, his framework is actually the 18 elements (attharasa dhātuyo), namely, the 6 sense-bases, the 6 sense-objects, and the 6 sense-consciousnesses, forming “the 18 physical and mental elements that constitute the conditions or foundations of the process of perception.”

Sanskrit fragments of the Bhaddekaratta Sutta found in Central Asia parallel M 131 (our sutta) in stating that the Buddha at Jetavana near Sāvatthī addresses the monks unprompted. The Sanskrit version however shows a remarkable departure in the direction of popular Buddhism. It preserves parts of the verses, but the rest of the fragment continues with dhāranis (mantras for meditation or protection), so that the rest of it must have been quite different from the Pali version.

2.1 LATENESS OF THE BHADDEKARATTA SUTTA (M 131). Scholars have noted an interesting discrepancy in the Vibhaṅga Vagga, where the Bhaddekaratta Suttas are located. All the other vaggas (chapters) of the Majjhima each has exactly ten discourses, except for the Vibhaṅga Vagga. Apparently, scholars propose that the Bhaddekaratta Sutta (M 131) and the Dakkhaṇa Vibhaṅga Sutta (M 142) are later additions, which does not, however, mean that they are late works. Analayo, in his Comparative Study of the Majjhima Nikāya, gives a helpful summary of the problem here:

Looking back on the altogether four Pāli discourses concerned with the bhaddekaratta verses, a noteworthy circumstance is that the chapter in which they are found, the Vibhaṅga Vagga, counts altogether twelve discourses. All other chapters in the Majjhima Nikāya consist of ten discourses only. Due to the present chapter’s departure from the standard count of ten discourses, the overall count of Majjhima Nikāya discourses runs into one-hundred-fifty-two, even though its main division is into three “fifties,” pannāsa, headings which suggests that there should be only one-hundred-fifty discourses.

This suggests the possibility that the Vibhaṅga Vagga originally may have had only ten discourses, to which subsequently two discourses were added. As the four discourses concerned with the bhaddekaratta verses treat the same topic, perhaps one or the other among them could be related to such an addition to an earlier set of ten discourses.

The first discourse among the four, the Bhaddekaratta Sutta, records exactly the same exposition as found in the Pāli and Chinese versions of the Lomasakāngiyabhaddekarattasutta, namely a treatment of the implications of the bhaddekaratta verses from the perspective of the five aggregates, given by the Buddha. It could easily be imagined how during the course of oral transmission the introductory part of the Lomasakāngiyabhaddekarattasutta was lost and only the exposition itself was remembered, which then became the Bhaddekaratta Sutta.

As the Bhaddekaratta Sutta is the only one of the four Pāli versions that does not have a Chinese counterpart, this discourse could indeed be the outcome of a transmission mistake, which perhaps was added to the Vibhaṅga Vagga, thereby causing an increase of the number of discourses in this chapter. The Sanskrit fragments paralleling the Bhaddekaratta Sutta do not necessarily contradict this hypothesis, as after the verses on an auspicious night the Sanskrit

26 See important def in BDikt: Dhātu (II).
27 Cat no 816 in SHT (Sanskrithandschriften aus den Turfanfunden) III:32 f.
28 Cat no 816 SHT V:1 f.
29 Cat no 816 SHT V:4 f.
30 L Renou, “Les divisions dans les texts sanscrites,” in Indo Iranian Journal, 1957:2 & 29 notes that groups of ten is a principal grouping in Vedic texts, which was also frequently used by the Buddhists and the Jains.
31 2005, draft (personal communications).
33 Horner (1959) at M:H 3:233 n1 arrives at the opposite hypothesis, as in relation to the Bhaddekaratta Sutta, she comments: “This is the Vagga that has 12 Discourses. If it were thought desirable to reduce them to the normal 10, this Discourse [ie the Bhaddekaratta Sutta], spoken by the Lord, would rank as one, and the next three, spoken by disciples, would have to be counted together as another single Discourse.” Yet, argues Analayo, the other three discourses are not all spoken by disciples, as only M 132 and M 133 are spoken by disciples, whereas the exposition in M 134 is spoken by the Buddha, so that authorship alone would not suffice for considering them as three versions of a single original. (Analayo’s n)

http://dharmafarer.org
version continues with dhāraṇīs etc., so that the Sanskrit discourse seems to stem from a different line of development.34

On this assumption, the count of discourses in this chapter could be reduced to eleven. A further reduction to ten through selecting another of the discourses concerned with the bhaddękaraṛata verses, however, does not seem possible. Though the introductory section of the Mahākaccānābhaddékaraṛata Sutta about the meeting between Samiddhi and a deva recurs in the same terms as the introduction to another discourse of different content in the Saṁyutta Nikāya,35 and the description of how the monks approached Mahākaccāna recurs in the same terms in the Madhupindaṇḍaka Sutta,36 the Madhyaṃa Āgama parallel agrees in both respects with the presentation in the Mahākaccānābhaddékaraṛata Sutta. Hence, at least from a comparative perspective, it would seem that the presentation in the Mahākaccānābhaddékaraṛata Sutta is well established, as is the case for the other two discourses treating the bhaddékaraṛata verses.

Another discourse that could have made its way into the Vībhanga Vagga at a later stage is the Dakkhiṇāvibhaṅga Sutta, a discourse which records how the Buddha refused a gift made to him by his foster mother and then gave an exposition on the merits of offerings to different recipients.37 (Analayo at M 3:201, 2005)

Although the Bhaddekaṛata Sutta (M 131) is a late addition to the Vībhanga Vagga and the Majjhima as a whole, it is a useful one, in that it preserves or purports to preserve the Buddha’s own version of the Bhaddekaṛata teaching generally addressed to the whole community, not to a particular individual, as is the case in the other Bhaddekaṛata Suttas.

3 The 15 wrong views and the 16 doubts

The Bhaddekaṛata Sutta here presents fifteen wrong views that are to be avoided [§§4, 6, 8] and their antidotes [§§7, 9, 11]. This simple framework showing the wrong views is based on the five aggregates (pañca-khandha), wrongly viewed over the three periods of time (past, present, future), thus totalling 15 wrong views. Conversely, the avoidance of them is regarded as the 15 right views, that is, no views.

Elsewhere, such as in the Sabbāśava Sutta (M 2.7 f), the Mahā Taṅhāsaṅkhaya Sutta (M 38.23) and the Paccaya Sutta (S 12.20), we find a slightly different way of dealing with wrong views, that is, classifying them as “the sixteen doubts,” in sets according to past, future and present:

(1) ‘Was I in the past?’
(2) ‘Was I not in the past?’
(3) ‘What was I in the past?’
(4) ‘How was I in the past?’
(5) ‘Having been what, did I become what in the past? [What was I before I became such and such in the past?]’

(6) ‘Will I be in the future?’
(7) ‘Am I not in the future?’
(8) ‘What will I be in the future?’
(9) ‘How will I be in the future?’

34 Cf cat no 816 R in SHT III:32 f.
35 Samiddhi S (S 1.20/1:8,16) records a visit by a deva to Samiddhi who had just taken a bath at the same hot springs (cf also J167/2:57). This meeting leads to a different discussion, as the visiting deva tries to tempt Samiddhi into enjoying sensual pleasures. The Āgama parallels to Samiddhi S (S 1.20)—SĀ 1078 = T2.281c4 & SĀ2 17 = T2.379a24—do not identify the monk.
36 M 18/1:110,6; MĀ 115 = T1.603c17 and EĀ 40.10 = T2.743a23.
37 M 142/3:253-257.
(10) ‘Having been what, what will I become in the future? [What now would lead me to that future state?]’

(11) ‘Am I?’
(12) ‘Am I not?’
(13) ‘What am I?’
(14) ‘How am I?’
(15) ‘Where has this being come from?’
(16) ‘Where will it [this being] go?’

(M 2.7+8/1:8, 38.23/1:265; S 12.20/2:26 f)

The Visuddhimagga\(^39\) discusses the abandonment of these 16 doubts in some detail. The Samyutta Commentary explains that the basic division expressed in the doubts—between existing and not existing in the past, etc—reflects the antinomy of eternalism and annihilationism. The other doubts pertaining to past lives arise within an eternalist framework. Similar discussions apply to the doubts pertaining to the future and the present (SA 2:241 f).

4 The 4 self-identity views

The explanation in verse 8 of the Sutta relates how an uninstructed ordinary person tends to regard any of the 5 aggregates (form, feeling, perception, mental formations, consciousness) in these ways:

1. ‘the aggregate’ as the self, or
2. the self as possessing ‘the aggregate’, or
3. ‘the aggregate’ as in the self, or
4. the self as in ‘the aggregate’.

The Paṭisambhidāmagga illustrates the 4 basic modes of self-identity view in connection with form in these manners:

1. One wrongly regards form as self, just as that the flame of a burning oil-lamp is identical to the colour of the flame.
2. One wrongly regards self as possessing form, just as a tree possesses a shadow.
3. One wrongly regards form as in self, just as the scent is in the flower.
4. One wrongly regards self as in form, just as a jewel is in a casket.\(^40\)

The Mahā Puṇṇama Sutta (M 109.10/3:17 f) and the Cūḷa Vedalla Sutta (M 44.7 f/1:300) list the 20 kinds of self-identity view in connection with the five aggregates.

Verse 9 of the sutta shows the opposite cycle, how an instructed noble disciple does not identify any of the five aggregates in terms of self.

A more elaborate application of this formula, differently worded but conveying the same idea, is found in the Mūla.pariyāya Sutta (M 1), where it is said, for example, that

The uninstructed ordinary worldling perceives earth as earth, but having perceived earth as earth,\(^41\) he conceives\(^42\) (himself as) earth;

---

\(^38\) See Sabbāsava S (M 2.7/1:8), SD 30.3..

\(^39\) Vism 19.5 f/599 & 19.21-27/603-605.

\(^40\) Pm 2.50, 74, 77, 90 = 1:144 f.

\(^41\) Comy says that there are 4 wrong ways of regarding the body due to mental conceivings and false views: (1) he sees physical form as self; (2) he sees self in physical form; (3) he thinks self is other than physical form; (4) he sees self as having physical form or physical form as in self (MA 1:31). The first is an annihilationist view; the rest are eternalist views.

\(^42\) “He conceives,” maññati, “he thinks.” This is the predominant verb here. The verb maññati is often used in the Pali suttas to refer to distorted thinking, i.e., ascribing to an object or experience characteristics and significance that are not derived from that object or experience, but from one’s own subjective imaginings (maññānā). “The cognitive distortion introduced by conceiving consists, in brief, in the intrusion of the egocentric perspective into the experience already slightly distorted by spontaneous perception.” (M:NB 1162 n6). Comy says that the activity of conceivhe conceives (himself) in earth;
he conceives (himself apart) from earth;
he conceives earth to be ‘mine’
—he delights in earth.

Why is that? Because he lacks full understanding,\textsuperscript{43} I say. (M 1,3/1:1)

In this connection, the Bhaddekaratta Sutta, or the Pārileyya Sutta (S 22.81)\textsuperscript{44} should be studied first and then the more difficult Mūla,pariyāya Sutta (M 1).\textsuperscript{45}

5 Related texts

5.1 The theme of watching the present is central to Buddhist meditation. A number of texts attest to this admonition. In the Atta,daṇḍa Sutta of the Sutta Nipāta, the Buddha admonishes

\begin{quote}
Let the past wither away.
Let what comes later be nothing—
If you grasp not at anything in between,
You will wander about calmed.
\end{quote}

\begin{quote}
yāṁ pubbe taṁ visosehi
pacchā te māhu kiñcanaṁ
majjhe ce no gahessati
upasanto carissasi
\end{quote}

(Sn 949/15.15)

This verse is interesting in that the key words \textit{pubbe}, \textit{pacchā} and \textit{majjhe} do not have their usual dictionary sense of “front,” “back” and “middle,” respectively. Instead here, according to the Mahā Niddesa, they mean “the past,” “the future” and “the present” respectively (Nm 434).

5.2 The exact sentiments of Sn 949 (in the Atta,daṇḍa Sutta) is found in the Dhammapada Commentary story of the acrobat Úgga,sena, who, after doing 14 somersaults, lands on his feet on the top of a bamboo pole. Then he hears the Buddha’s koan-like teaching and becomes an arhat:

\begin{quote}
Let go of the front [future]!
Let go of the middle [the present]!
With the mind released from everything,
You will wander about calmed.
\end{quote}

\begin{quote}
Let go of the back [past]!
Cross over to the farther shore [nirvana]!
suffer no more birth nor decay.
\end{quote}

(Dh 348; DhA 24.6/4:62 f)

5.3 Another Dhammapada verse—in the Brāhmaṇa Vagga—says:

\begin{quote}
For whom there is nothing in front, behind or in the middle,
who has nothing, ungrasping,
I call him a brahmin.
\end{quote}

(Dh 421)

By “who has nothing” (\textit{akiñcanaṁ}) is meant that there is no “grasping through craving” in the three aspects (past, future, present) (DhA 26.38/4:230). A similar teaching is given in the Brahma,deva Sutta (S 6.3).\textsuperscript{46}

5.4 The benefits of the practice exhorted by the Bhaddekaratta Suttas are mentioned in the Araññe Sutta (S 1.10), where a forest deva asks the Buddha why the monks meditating in the forests, living only on a single meal a day, look very serene. The Buddha’s reply, echoing of the sentiment of the Bhaddekaratta Suttas, thus:

\begin{quote}
They do not sorrow after the past,
They keep themselves to what is before them—
Through longing for the future,
Fools dry up and wither away
Nor do they long for the future.
Hence their demeanour is so serene.
Through sorrowing after the past,
Like green reed that is cut down.
\end{quote}

(S 1.10/1:5)

\footnotesize
\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{43} “Lack of full understanding,” \textit{apariññāta}. See Mūla,pariyāya S (M 1), SD 11.8 (2).
\item \textsuperscript{44} S 22.81/3:94-99 @ SD 6.1.
\item \textsuperscript{45} M 1/1:1-6 @ SD 11.8.
\item \textsuperscript{46} S 6.3/1:140-142 @ SD 12.4.
\end{itemize}
5.5 The same sentiment is succinctly expressed in a stanza of the Eka,vihāriya Thera,gāthā:

If no one at all is found in front or behind,
It is very pleasant for one dwelling in the forest.

purato pacchato vāpi ce na vijjati atīva phāsu bhavati ekassa vasato vane.

(Tha 537)

5.6 As already mentioned [2], this sutta should be studied with such suttas as the Mahā Taṅkha,saṅkhaya Sutta (M 38), the Sabbāsava Sutta (M 2.7/1:8) and the Paccaya Sutta (S 12.20), all of which give a slightly different way of dealing with wrong views, that is, classifying them as “the 16 doubts,” instead of the 15 wrong views mentioned below in the Sutta §§4, 6, 8. Another important related text is the Migājala Sutta 1 (S 35.63).

5.7 Nāpañanda has written an enlightening introduction with notes to his translation of the Bhaddeka,otta Sutta, called The Ideal Solitude.

6 Ananda’s story

6.1 Scholars of comparative Buddhism have noted how the simple teachings of self-reliance of the Bhaddeka,otta Sutta later, in the Mahāyāna, developed apotropaic (magical and protective) departures. The Sutta’s Ṛgveda parallel, found at MĀ 167 = T1.699c-700b, has the title “spoken by Ānanda,” 阿難説, and agrees with M 132 on locating the discourse in Jetavana, near Sāvatthī. Sanskrit fragments have also preserved a discourse on the verses on an auspicious night with Ānanda as its main protagonist.

6.2 Analayo, in his Comparative Study of the Majjhima Nikāya, notes that, “[i]n the introductory narration,” this discourse begins with a tale also found in the Divyāvadāna and in the Śūrangama Sūtra. According to this tale, Ānanda has been overpowered by a magic spell by an outcaste or untouchable (caṇḍāla) woman, whose daughter has fallen in love with him and is rescued by a magical counterspell by the Buddha just in time to prevent him from having sexual intercourse with the girl. Winternitz (1912:249) comments that the whole literature of mantras and dhāraṇīs, of spells and incantations, found in later Mahāyāna, finds its explanation in this episode. The common people felt a need for mantras and spells, and Buddhism had to take this need into account. In order to be able to counter the mantras of other sorcerers, the Buddhist monks needed to have their own mantras. At first these “mantras” were moral sayings like the Maṅgala Sutta and the Ratana Sutta...but eventually that did not suffice. (Analayo’s tr fr the German original)

6.3 Analayo further notes that, similar to this Sanskrit fragment, in the individual Chinese parallel and the three Tibetan parallels to the Mahā Kaccāna Bhaddeka,otta Sutta (M 133), the verses on the auspicious night are followed by dhāraṇīs, etc, “thereby furnishing additional examples for the tendency discerned by Winternitz.” (id) [1]

47 M 38.23/1:265 @ SD 7.9.
48 S 35.63/4:35-37 @ SD 44.6.
51 At M 132 Intro.
53 T945 = T19.106c9.
54 Cat no 816 in SHT III:32 f.
56 Tib versions no 313 = mdo sde sa 161b2, no 617 = rgyud ’bum ba 56a7, and no 974 = gzungs ’dus vain 90a3.

http://dharmafarer.org

142
The Discourse on the One
Who Delights in the Auspicious Oneness
or, The Discourse on a Good Night of Mental Oneness\(^57\)

M 131

Preamble

1 Thus have I heard.
   At one time the Blessed One was staying in Anātha,piṇḍika’s Park in Jeta’s Forest near Sāvatthī.

Then the Blessed One addressed the monks thus:

“Bhikshus!”

“Bhante!” the bhikshus replied to the Blessed One.

The Blessed One said this:

2 “Bhikshus, I will teach you the summary and analysis of ‘the one of the wholesome night’ (buddha,ka,ratta).\(^58\) Listen, bhikshus, pay close attention to it, I will speak.”

“Yes, bhante!” the monks replied to the Blessed One.

The Blessed One said this:

Bhadd’eka,ratta Gāthā

3 Let one not pursue \(^59\) the past,\(^60\) nor hold fond hope for the future.
   for, the past is gone,\(^61\) and the future has not yet come.\(^62\)

3.2 The present state, as it arises,\(^63\)
   one sees each of them with insight;
   immovable, unshakable,\(^64\)
   having known that, let one be sure of it.

Atitaṁ nānvāgameyya
   n’appatiṅkakhe anāgataṁ;
   yad atitaṁ pahānaṁ tāṁ
   appattaṁ ca anāgataṁ.

Paccupannaṁ ca yo dhammaṁ,
   tattha tattha vipassati;
   asanhiṁ ca asankuppan,
   taṁ vidvā manubrhāyaye.

---

\(^{57}\) On the title, see Intro (1).

\(^{58}\) On the title, see Intro (1).

\(^{59}\) “Let one...not pursue [not dwell on]” (anvāgameyya), pot 3 sg of anvāgameti (caus of anvāgacchati = anu + ā-gacchati), lit “to let come back,” ie to wish something back (CPD), to run after, dwell on. [This tr was suggested by Kumara Bhikkhu of Malaysia, email 17 Aug 2013.]

\(^{60}\) Cf patissarati at SD 41.6 (2.3.6.1).

\(^{61}\) Alt tr: “For the past has passed away.”

\(^{62}\) Alt tr: “And the future is yet unreached”; poetically, “the future never comes.”

\(^{63}\) Comy: One should contemplate each state as it arises by way of the 7 contemplations of insight (ie by way of insight into impermanence, suffering, not-self, revulsion, dispassion, cessation, relinquishment) (MA 5:1 f).

\(^{64}\) Comy explains that this is said for the purpose of showing insight (vipassanā) and counter-insight (pativipassanā) [ie, the application of the principles of insight to the act of consciousness that exercises the function of insight, on the basis of which it is possible to attain arhathood: see M 52,4/1:350, 121,11/3:108; also M:NB 1333 n1143.] For insight is “immovable, unshakable”[following Sn:N 1149] because it is not defeated or shaken [moved] by lust and other defilements (MA 5:2). Elsewhere, “immovable, unshakable” are epithets of Nirvana (Sn 1149) or of the liberated mind (Tha 469). Here, however, it seems to refer to a stage in the development of insight. The recurrence of the verb sanhiṁ [8, 9] “suggests that the intended meaning is contemplation of the present state without being misled into the adoption of a view of self” (M:NB 1343 n1213).

http://dharmafarer.org

143
3.3 Work at the task this very day!\(^{65}\)

Who knows, death would come tomorrow?

For, there is no bargaining whatsoever with death’s great horde.

3.4 One who dwells thus ardently, relentlessly, day and night—he is bhaddaka, ratta [one who delights in the wholesome oneness (of mind)],

says the peaceful sage.\(^{66}\)

Let go of the past

4 “How, bhikshus, does one pursue the past?

(1) One seeks delight there, thinking: ‘I had such form in the past.’\(^{67}\)

(2) One seeks delight there, thinking: ‘I had such feeling in the past.’

(3) One seeks delight there, thinking: ‘I had such perception in the past.’

(4) One seeks delight there, thinking: ‘I had such formations in the past.’

(5) One seeks delight there, thinking: ‘I had such consciousness in the past.’

This is how, bhikshus, one pursue the past.

5 And how, bhikshus, does one not pursue the past?

(1) One does not seek delight there, thinking, ‘I had such form in the past.’\(^{68}\)

(2) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘I had such feeling in the past.’

(3) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘I had such perception in the past.’

(4) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘I had such formations in the past.’

(5) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘I had such consciousness in the past.’

This is how, bhikshus, one does not pursue the past.

Let go of the future

6 And how, bhikshus, does one hold fond hope for the future?

(6) One seeks delight there thinking, ‘May I have such form in the future.’\(^{69}\)

(7) One seeks delight there thinking: ‘May I have such feelings in the future.’

(8) One seeks delight there thinking: ‘May I have such perception in the future.’

(9) One seeks delight there thinking: ‘May I have such formations in the future’

\(^{65}\) This line and the next are qu at UA 89, DhA 3:430. Cf “You must make the effort. | The tathagatas only show the way. | Liberated are those who have practised, who meditate, freed from Mara’s bonds” (tumhehi kicca atappam | akkhātāro tathāgataā | paṭipānānā paṭomakhānti | jhāyino māra, bandhanā, Dh 276).

\(^{66}\) The peaceful sage here is of course the Buddha (MA 5:3).

\(^{67}\) Comy says that one thus “seeks delight” by associating the past in terms of craving or a view associated with craving (MA 5:3). “It should be noted that it is not the mere recollection of the past through memory that causes bondage, but the reliving of past experiences with thoughts of craving. In this respect the Buddha’s teaching differs significantly from that of Krishnamurti, who seems to regard memory itself as the villain behind the scene” (M:NB 1143 n1215).

\(^{68}\) Eva, rūpo ahosi anātāṁ addhānāṁ ti tattha nandati na samanvāneti. Comy glosses samanvāneti as anupavatteti, “he keeps moving on after; keeps pursuing” (MA 5:3). Bodhi says that the Pali syntax allows the sentence here means that either (1) one thinks, “I had such form in the past,” yet does not find delight in that thought; or (2) that one does not find delight in the past by thinking such a thought. Horner (M:H), Nānananda (Ideal Solitude) and Nāṇamoli (MS) construe the sentence following (1), which Bodhi followed in the 1st ed of M:NB, but “on reconsideration, I now believe that the second interpretation is more true to the intention of the text. This also ties in better with the stanzas themselves, which enjoin the disciple not to dwell in the past and future but to contemplate ‘each presently arisen state’ just as it presents itself” (M:NB 1344 n1216). In the tr here I try to reflect the lack of delight in both the contemplation itself and in the arisen thought.

\(^{69}\) Eva, rūpo siyāṁ anāgataṁ addhānāṁ ti tattha nandiṁ samanvāneti.
(10) One seeks delight there, thinking: ‘May I have such consciousness in the future.’ This is how, bhikshus, one holds fond hope of the future.

7 And how, bhikshus, does one not hold fond hope for the future?

(6) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘May I have such form in the future.’
(7) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘May I have such feelings in the future.’
(8) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘May I have such perception in the future.’
(9) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘May I have such formations in the future’
(10) One does not seek delight there, thinking: ‘May I have such consciousness in the future.’ This is how, bhikshus, one does not hold fond hope of the future.

Let go of the present

8 And how, bhikshus, is one dragged along [distracted] by each present state as it arises?

(11) Here, bhikshus, an untaught ordinary person, who has no regard for the noble ones and is unskilled and undisciplined in their Dharma, who has no regard for true persons and is unskilled and undisciplined in their Dharma, regards form as self, or self as possessed of form, or form as in self, or self as in form. 71

(12) He regards feeling as self, or self as possessed of feeling, or feeling as in self, or self as in feeling.
(13) He regards perception as self, or self as possessed of perception, or perception as in self, or self as in perception.
(14) He regards formations as self, or self as possessed of formations, or formations as in self, or self as in formations.
(15) He regards consciousness as self, or self as possessed of consciousness, or consciousness as in self, or self as in consciousness.

This is how, bhikshus, one is dragged along [distracted] by each present state as it arises.

9 And how, bhikshus, is one not dragged along [undistracted] by each present state as it arises?

(11) Here, bhikshus, a well-taught noble disciple, who has regard for the noble ones and is skilled and disciplined in their Dharma, who has regard for true persons and is skilled and disciplined in their Dharma, does not regard form as self,

nor self as possessed of form,
nor form as in self,
nor self as in form.
(12) He does not regard feeling as self,
nor self as possessed of feeling,
nor feeling as in self,
nor self as in feeling.
(13) He does not regard perception as self as self,
nor self as possessed of perception,
nor perception as in self,
nor self as in perception.
(14) He does not regard formations as self,
nor self as possessed of formations,
nor formations as in self,
nor self as in formations.

70 "Is dragged along by" (saññhirati), or "is moved, distracted by," passive of sanharati, "he gathers together." This verb, saññhirati, here and in the next para, refers back to the line in the verse, asaññhirati asañkuppam ("immoveable, unshakable"). Comy says: "One is dragged along by craving and views because of the lack of insight." (MA 5:4).

71 On these four self-identity views, see Intro (4).
(15) He does not regard consciousness as self, nor self as possessed of consciousness, nor consciousness as in self, nor self as in consciousness.
This is how, bhikshus, one is not dragged along [undistracted] by each present state as it arises.”

Conclusion

10 Let one not pursue [not dwell on] the past, nor hold fond hope for the future.
for what is past has passed away, and the future has not yet come.

11 The present state as it arises, with insight see each of them; immovable, unshakable,
having known that, let one be sure of it,

12 Work at the task this very day!
Who knows, death would come tomorrow?
For, there is no bargaining whatsoever with death’s great horde.

13 One who dwells thus ardently, relentlessly, day and night—he is bhaddeka,ratta [one who delights in the auspicious oneness (of mind)],
says the peaceful sage.

14 So it was in reference to this that it is said, ‘Bhikshus, I will teach you the summary and analysis of “the [one who delights in the wholesome oneness (of mind)].”’

The Blessed One said this. The monks joyfully approved72 of the Blessed One’s word.

— evaṁ —

Bibliography

Analayo Bhikkhu

Ñāṇananda, Bhikkhu

040902 060418 071110 091027 101207 121019 131009 140905 150706

72 “Joyfully approved,” attamanā...abhinandum.