2 Kīsā Gotamī

(a) Kīsā Gotamī Sutta, The Kīsā Gotamī Discourse | S 5.3
(b) Kīsā Gotamī Therīgāthā, The Verses of the Elder Nun Kīsā Gotamī | Thī 213-223
(c) *Kīsā Gotamī Therī Vatthu, The Story of the Elder Nun Kīsā Gotamī | AA 1:377-380
(d) Kīsā Gotamī Vatthu, The Story of Kīsā Gotamī | DhA 8.13 + 20.11

Theme: An early case of a psychological defence of denial
Translated & annotated by Piya Tan ©2007, 2013

Based on Ch 9 of The Buddha and His Disciples: Profiles and perspectives in self-discovery, lecture series, The Singapore Buddhist Federation & The Buddhist Fellowship, 2002;

1 Sutta notes

1.1 VERSIONS OF THE STORY. Our heart starts to heal with a positive mental attitude of loy-ingkindness to ourself and to the perceived “oppressor;” be it a person (ourselves or other) or a situation. It is important to try to understand the “oppressor”: why he or she or it is “oppressive,” and do something positive about it.1 We have to work towards some level of self-wisdom to do this.

The story of Kīsā Gotamī is very popular among the Buddhists, especially the Theravāda. The Commentaries have three versions of the story—one in the Aṅguttara Commentary2 and Therīgāthā Commentary;3 the second one (shortest and least known) in the Sàhàyuttta Commentary4 and the third (the best known) in the Dhammapada Commentary,5 all differing in some important details although most of them centre around the same two closing verses. In all three versions, Gotamī is said to undergo protracted psychological denial over the loss of her only child.

1.2 KĪSĀ GOTAMĪ, being lean (kīsā) in a society that extols fleshiness in womanly beauty, finds difficulty in being accepted in marriage. Once married, she seeks to win her status in her new family by having a child. When she loses her only child after a long-awaited pregnancy, she falls into the rut of denial, wandering about in search of a cure for her dead child. She meets the Buddha who tells her to find some mustard seeds from a house that has known no death. As she goes from house to house throughout the city, the message of impermanence and death is echoed and re-echoed into her being. She returns a sane person to the Buddha and is ordained into the order.6

A vital theme that runs through all versions of these Kīsā Gotamī stories is her walk in search of a handful of mustard seeds that would revive her dead son. This action represents a spiritual movement away from her old suffering self towards a new liberated self. We see a similar movement in the Budha’s conversion of Āṅgulimāla, where he runs after the Buddha to kill him, but he could not catch up with the Buddha until he calls out to the Buddha. The ensuing dialogue marks the spiritual turning-point in Āṅgulimāla’s life.7

---

1 See eg Thich Nhat Hanh’s poem “Please Call Me By My True Names” (in Peace is Every Step, London, 1991:123 f)
2 AA 1:377-380.
3 ThīA 174-182.
4 AA 1:190 f. Interestingly, the short version has a couple of worldly (Chaucerian) details in connection with Gotamī and the landowner’s son.
6 DhA 2:270-275; AA 791-796; ThīA 58.174-176; cf. Thī 213-223. See also Rogers, Buddhaghosa’s Parables, Tibetan Tales—Derived from Indian Sources (from Tibetan of Kah-Gyur) German tr F Anton von Schiefler. Eng-ish tr of the German by W R S Ralston (London: George Routledge & Sons; New York: EP Dutton, 1926), 11:216-226. In the Tibetan version, certain episodes of the story of Pañcācāra (DhA 8.12) are incorporated into the story of sen, 1880. See also Miracles, SD 27.5a (8.6.2).
7 Āṅgulimāla S (M 86.5/2:98 f), SD 5.11.

http://dharmafarer.org
1.3 COMMENTARIAL ACCOUNTS

1.3.1 The Anguttara Commentary story has more hagiographical details (such as her past life in Padum‘uttara Buddha’s time). The Therīgāthā Commentary text is the longest, because it contains her Therīgāthā and Apadāna texts, and their glosses. In fact, the narrative is about as short as the Sānīyutta version (which is the shortest). The Dhammapada Commentary version is the most secular and has the longest narrative, with the best known ending, relating how Gotamī gains awakening by reflecting on the lamp-flames. [2,4]

1.3.2 The first three (AA, ThīA, SA) are the works of Buddhaghosa, while the last (DhA) is of unconfirmed authorship but attributed to one Culla Buddhaghosa (Deutero Buddhaghosa). In either case, it is said that they were translated into Pali from the ancient Sinhala Commentaries (atthakathā), which were, in turn, said to be records of earlier traditions brought by the arhat Mahinda (Asoka’s son) from India.

1.3.3 From the two stories, and other differences, such as in their respective styles, it strongly suggests the two Commentaries were authored by different individuals or that the Dhammapada Commentary had more than one author. It is possible that the DhA version was written in Sri Lanka around the 5th century.

2 Flooding

2.1 “Flooding” is, in Buddhist terms, a therapeutic procedure in behavior therapy in which a patient is confronted with the thing he fears or has trouble with, either imagined or real, under safe circumstances. Through controlled exposure, the client eventually becomes habituated to it, and the initial fear responses or difficulties gradually diminish and disappear. As such, it is a form of exposure therapy. Of course, flooding as a psychotherapeutic technique is never taken lightly, for it might backfire if we are unable to effectively guide the client, or not clearly understand how the client’s mind works. The Buddha knows exactly what he is doing.

Just as the Buddha heals Gotamī by making her face true reality through her own actions, a modern psychotherapist might use flooding to uncover the realities of her fixation on the dead child. In other words, before a client could abandon a fixation, he must first realize that it is a fixation. It is easier to deal with what we can actually see beyond any reasonable doubt.

2.2 Kisā Gotamī is instructed by the Buddha to get a handful of mustard seeds. This is an easy task which would take her mind away from being fixated on the negative idea of loss. The mustard seeds, however, must come from a house where no one has died. This is very likely as the families of the Buddha’s time were, as a rule, extended families, and as such would certainly have experienced some deaths. The therapy here is to reinforce the notion of true reality upon Gotamī that death is real and universal—

---

10 In his Intro to Samanta, pāsādikā (Vinaya Commentary), Buddhaghosa says that he not only translated the Commentaries of the Mahāvihāra from the Sinhala, but compared them with the Comys of other monasteries, abbreviated and freely revised them. Burlingame (Journal of the American Oriental Society, 38 1918:267 f) says that the tradition according to which the Atṭhakathā were tr from Pali into Sinhala, and back again into Pali by Buddhaghosa and others, is “unreliable and misleading,” because Buddhaghosa and the compiler of DhA availed themselves of common Pali originals though independently of each other, and because both Dhammapālā and the compiler of JA copied from Buddhaghosa’s Comys. “Nevertheless, it is possible, indeed probable, that the 5th century translators, though translating from the Singhalese, used available Pāli texts as well (eg of legends and tales)” (Winternitz, 1933:190 n4).
11 See Oskar von Hinuber, A Handbook of Pali Literature, 1996: §§262-269. Winternitz remarks that “the legend proves itself genuinely Indian, owing to the fact that it belongs to the type of ‘consolatory stories’ so familiar to us” (1933:193).
13 Such as ACT (Acceptance and Commitment Therapy): see SD 43.1: The ACT therapeutic process.
and that she is not the only one with such a loss. This is a very practical example of the Buddhist healing notion of “disowning the pain.”

Gotamī is unable to see the true reality of death and loss because she is deeply attached to her only child. She has invested all her emotions and hopes in the child whom she tragically and totally loses. This is like the rug being pulled from under her feet, so that she falls from all normality into a profound state of delusion—thinking that the child is only “sick,” and can somehow be healed.

2.3 This is the kind of painful reality that false religions and dissolve charlatans often exploit. Wrong advice and false consolation can also come from those who are devoted to an external agency (such as a God idea) or magical beliefs, so that the victim’s delusion and suffering are sublimated, but unsolved, even aggravated.

What the Buddha instructs Gotamī to do is effectively a self-therapy or personal healing. The Buddha only gives the instructions or prescription, but Gotamī herself undergoes the process of self-knowing and self-healing—coming to terms with herself—through her own efforts. Since the gloom and pain are self-inflicted, it is the self that can and must work with itself. This is the nature of the mind.

2.4 SEQUENCE OF TEXTS. This chapter on Kisā Gotamī begins with two canonical texts, one from the Sānīyutta, the other from the Therīgāthā. These are followed by two versions of her story based on the Commentaries on the Aṅguttara, the Sānīyutta, the Therīgāthā and the Dhammapada. The first story is a composite of related and overlapping accounts from various commentaries, and the second is the well known version from the Dhammapada Commentary stories. [1.3]

| SD 43.2a | Kisā Gotamī Sutta | S 5.3 |
| SD 43.2b | Kisā Gotamī Therīgāthā | Thī 213-223 |
| SD 43.2c | Kisā Gotamī Therī Vatthu | AA 1:377-380; SA 1:190f; ThīA 174-187 & ApThī 22/564-567; DhA 26.12/4:156 f |
| SD 43.2d | Kisā Gotamī Vatthu | DhA 8.13/2:270-275 & 20.11/3:431-434 |

The first canonical text is the Kisā Gotamī Sutta (S 5.3), detailing how she defeats Māra who appears to distract her from her meditation [SD 43.2a]. This account shows her as an arhat nun who has “gotten past the death of sons,” so that she fears not Māra.

Then follows the second canonical text, the Kisā Gotamī Therīgāthā (Thī 212-223), where the arhat Gotamī recounts her spiritual life up to her full awakening. This gives the gist of her personal loss and suffering, and how she overcomes them. [SD 43.2b]

The third text—the Kisā Gotamī Therī Vatthu—“the story of the nun Kisā Gotamī,” is a composite of commentarial accounts, with canonical verses from a late hagiographical biographical work on the saints, the Apadāna, forming an integrated account of her lay life. Some details, not mentioned in the main texts of the re-telling here, are found in the foot-notes at relevant points. [SD 43.2c]

The fourth and last text is the Kisā Gotamī Vatthu, “the story of Kisā Gotamī,” which combines the two Dhammapada Commentary accounts into a single story. This contains the Kisā Gotamī story we are most familiar with which is based on Dhammapada 114. [SD 43.2d]

---

14 See Sall’atthena S (S 36.6/4:207-210), SD 5.5 (The 2 kinds of pains), & SD 26.9 (4.1.2); also Piya Tan, Reflection, “Don’t own the pain,” R122 2010.

15 Sublimation is also one of the unconscious defence mechanisms, which prevents us from dealing directly with the real problem, giving only some kind of momentary “defence,” which may, in turn, lead to other difficulties. See Khaluṇka S (A 8.14/4:190-195), SD 7.9; also SD 24.10b (2).
SD 43.2a

The Kisā Gotamī Sutta
The Kisā Gotamī Discourse | S 5.3/1:129 f
Theme: Gotamī overcomes Māra

1. Originating in Sāvatthī.
   Then, in the morning, the nun Kisā Gotamī dressed and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.16

2. When she had gone on her almsround in Sāvatthī and returned from it, [130] after her meal, she went to the Andhāvāna for the day rest.
   Having plunged into the Andhāvāna [Blind Men’s Forest], she sat down at the foot of a tree for the day rest.

3. Then, Māra the bad one, desiring to arouse fear, terror [quaking] and horror [horripilation], desiring to make her fall away from concentration, approached the nun Kisā Gotamī.
   Having approached the nun Kisā Gotamī, he said this to her:

   525  Kīṁ nu tvāṁ hata,puttā va
   ekam āsi rudam,mukhī
   vanaṁ ajjhoghatā ekā
   purisāṁ nu gavesasiti
   Why now, when your son is dead,
   Do you sit here alone with tearful face?
   Having entered the woods all alone,
   Are you on the lookout for a man?

4. Then it occurred to the nun Kisā Gotamī, “Now who is this that uttered the verse? Is it a human or a non-human?”

5. Then it occurred to the nun Kisā Gotamī, “This is Māra the bad one, desiring to arouse fear, terror [quaking] and horror [horripilation], desiring to make me fall away from concentration!”

6. Then, the nun Gotamī knowing that it is Māra the bad one, addressed him in verse:17

   526  Accantaṁ hata,puttāṁhi
   purisā etad antikā
   na socāmi na rodāmi
   na tāṁ bhāyāmi āvuso
   I have gotten past the death of sons;
   With this, the search for men has ended.
   I do not sorrow, I do not weep,
   Nor do I fear you, friend.

   527  Sabbattha vihatā nandi
   tamo-k,khandho padālito
   jetvāna maccuno senāṁ
   viharāmi anāsavāti
   Destroyed is delight everywhere, split apart is the mass of darkness,
   having conquered Māra’s army,
   I dwell influx-free.

7. Then Māra the bad one, realizing, “The nun Kisā Gotamī knows me!” sad and disappointed, disappeared right there.

   — evaṁ —

Here, in S 526, Gotamī puns on the expression “gotten past the death of sons.” First, she accepts her child’s death so that her mourning is over. Having understood the Dharma, she has no further need of a son; as such, she has no more fear of losing one. So she lives fearless of Māra.

   — — —

16 Comy here recounts the well-known story of her search for the mustard seeds that would revive her dead son (SA 1:190 f), told in greater detail in AA 1:377; DhA 8.13/2:270-275 & 20.11/3:431-434; ThīA 174-182.
17 Cf Thī 213–223, but they do not correspond.

http://dharmafarer.org
SD 43.2b

213 Kalyāṇa, mittatā muniṇā
lokam ādissa vaṃṣitā,
Kalyāṇa, mitte bhājamāno
api bālo paṇḍito assa

214 Bhajitabbā sappurīsa
pañña tathā vaḍḍhati21 bhajato nam,22
Bhājamāno [ ]23 sappurīse
sabbehi’pi dukkhehi pamucceyya.24

215 Dukkhaṁ ca25 vijāneyya dukkhassa
ca samudayaṁ nirodhami
Attāṅgikānaṁ ca maggaṁ
cattā’pi ariya, saccāni [ca]27
[Spoken by a yakshini:]29

216 Dukkho itthi, bhāvo akkhatō
purīsa, dhamma, sārathinā, Sapattikam pi [hi]31 dukkhaṁ
appekaccā32 sakinī vijāyayo

Kisā Gotamī Therī, gāthā
The Verses of the Elder Nun Kisā Gotamī | Thī 213-223

Spiritual friendship18 has been praised [explained] by the sage in regard to the world:
resorting to spiritual friends
even the foolish would be wise.19

True individuals are to be associated with,20 associating with him, his wisdom thus grows.
Resorting to true individuals,
one would be freed from all sufferings.

One should know suffering, and suffering’s arising, and its ending,
and the eightfold path—
and the four noble truths, too.28

Being a woman has been said to be painful by the caravan leader of persons to be tamed.30
Being a co-wife, too, is suffering:
some, having given birth but once,

---

18 Comy takes this as a bahuvrīhi: “the state of having a spiritual friend” (ThīA 177). In full: “a spiritual friend, good companion, good comrade” (kalyāṇa, mitta kalyāṇa, sahāya kalyāṇa, sampavanka): D 33.3.3(1)/3:267 (the 10 nātha, karaṇa, dhamma), S 34.2.3(1)/3:290 (the 10 bāha, kāraṇa, dhamma); S 34.2.3(1)/3:290 (the 10 bāha, kāraṇa, dhamma);

19 On the 3 sentiments of this verse, cf Thī 75c.

20 Cf Mahā Maṅgala S (Sn 2.4 = Khp 5): “Associating with the wise...this is a supreme blessing” (paṇḍitānaṁ ca sevanā...etam maṅgalam uttamaṁ) (Sn 2.4/258-269/46 f. = Khp 5/2 f). Here paṇḍita is clearly a synonym for sappurīsa. On the true individual (sappurīsa), see Sappurīsa S (M 113), SD 29.6 & Bāla Paṇḍita S (M 129,27-50), SD 2:22; see also D 33.2.2(6)/3:252, 34.1.8(7)/3:283; M 110.14-24/3:23 f; A 7.64/4:113, 8.38/4:144.

21 Be Ce Se so; Ee pavaṭṭhāti. On philological n, see ThāN 100 n214.

22 Be Ce Se bhajantānaṁ; Ce so.

23 Only Se adds koci khatti’y ādiko, “such as any kshatriya... “.

24 Be Ce so; Ee muceyya: Ke Se c’eva mocaye: see Thā: Ee ed L Alsdorf, App II 1966:238 fn.

25 Be Ce Se so; Ee dukkhaṁ c’eva.

26 This and next lines:

27 Be Ce so; Ee caṭṭārī ariya, saccāni; Se has ca.

28 Alt tr: These are the four noble truths, too.

29 Comy says that a yakshini (female nature spirit), recalling her sufferings in previous existences, spoke these 2 verses (ThīA 178).

30 More fully, “peerless guide of persons to be tamed” (anuttaro purīsa, dhamma, sārathī), the 6th of the Buddha’s 9 qualities (eg S 1:219,31); see Buddhānussati, SD 15.7 esp (3.6).

31 Be Ee Se sapattikam pi hi; Ce omits hi.

32 Lines cd: Be Ce so. Ee nirodhaṁ ca atṭhaṅgika maggaṁ; Se nirodhi’atṭhaṅgika, maggaṁ.
217
Galake api kantanti sukhumāiniyo visāni khādanti, Jana, māraka, majhya, gata ubho ’pi vyasanāni anubhonti

Even slit their throats; the delicate women take poisons. Those who have entered the womb are people-killers. Both meet with disasters, too.

[The elder nun Kisā Gotamī, speaking with reference to the elder nun Paṭācārā:]

218
Upavijaññā gacchanti addasāhāṁ patin mataṁ Pantham hi vijāyīvā na appattā va sakaṁ gharam

While walking, about to give birth, my husband dead saw I, having given birth on a path, not even reached my own house.

219
Dve puttā kāla, katā paṭi ca panthe mato kapanikāya, Mātā piṭa ca bhātā dayhanti ca eka, cita, kāyāṁ

Two sons dead, and my husband miserably dead, too, on the path. Mother, father and brother, too, were burning on the same pyre.

[The elder nun Kisā Gotamī, speaking with reference to herself:]

220
Khīṇa, kuline kapane anubhūtaṁ te dukkhaṁ aparimāṇaṁ Assu ca te pavattaṁ [hi] bahūni jāti, sahassāni

O miserable woman, with family destroyed, you’ve suffered immeasurable pain! And your tears had fallen for many thousands of births!

221
Vasitā passiṁ susāna, majhje atho ’pi khādātinī putta, mānāsāni Hata, kulikā sabba, garaḥitā mata, patikā amataṁ adhiracchi

Living in the heart of a charnel ground I saw, then, my own sons’ flesh devoured. With family destroyed, despised by all, husband dead, I gained the death-free.

---

33 Be Ce Se so; Ee gale.
34 Be Ce api kantanti; Ee Se apakantanti.
35 Comy resolves this as – māraka, majhya, gata, “the killer that has entered the middle (the womb),” but it can also be resolved as – māraka-ajhya, gata, “the killer that has entered into...” Jana, māraka, “people-killer” refers to defilements (kilesa) (ThA 178).
36 Comy: A wrongly positioned foetus, eg, would kill the woman; hence, the foetus is a killer of womankind (ThA 178).
37 Comy says that “both” here refers to the foetus and the pregnant woman. Some say that defilements (kilesa) are the “killers” and the “two” are the mother and father, who on account of their fever of passions would continue falling into suffering states, which prob refers to post-natal depression (ThA 178). It is also possible that “both” here also refers to the 2 kinds of suicides (Th:N 101).
38 Comy notes that these 2 verses refer to Paṭācārā, when she is unhinged by grief, and these verses were spoken by her to show the dangers of womanhood: this also reflects Gotamī’s own condition (ThA 178 f). For Paṭācārā’s verses, see Thī 112-116 = SD 43.3.
39 Be Ce so; Ee Se geham.
40 ThA 178.
41 Ee so; Be Ce kūnī, kulamhi.
42 Here Kisā Gotamī is addressing herself in a soliloquy.
43 Be dukham; Ce Ee Se so.
44 Only in Se.
45 Be Ce omit passiṁ; Ee Se passiṁ tam susāna, majhje.
46 Ee Se passiṁ: see prec n.
47 Comy gives a dramatic account saying that this line refers to her having been reborn there (in past lives) as a female dog or female jackal feeding on human carcases, or as a tiger, leopard or cat, eating the flesh of her own dead children (ThA 179). However, from the verses themselves, we can surmise that Kisā Gotamī is prob referring to her own observations of animals feeding on the carcases when she goes there to dispose of her own child’s remains.
48 Be Ee Se so; Ce hatu, kulukā.
222 Bhāvito me maggo
  ariyo aṭṭhaṅgiko
  Nibbānaṃ sacchi, kataṃ
dhamm ʿādāsaṃ apekkhi ʿham.

Cultivated by me is the path
noble and eightfold, leading to the death-free.
nirvana has been realized!
I’ve looked into the Dharma mirror.

223 Aham-amhi kanta, sallā
  ohita, bhārā kataṃ hi
caraniyaṃ,
Kisā gotamī therī
  suvimutta, cittā
  imāṃ bhanīti.

I’ve removed my dart,
laid down the burden, done what is to be done.
The elder nun Kisā Gotamī, with well-liberated mind, said this.

— evaṃ —

SD 43.2c

Kisā Gotamī Therī Vatthu
The Story of the Elder Nun Kisā Gotamī (composite) AA 1:377-380; SA 1:190 f; ThīA 174-182; DhA 26.12/4:156 f
commentarial glosses omitted;

1 Gotami’s spiritual aspiration

1.1 Her name was Gotamī, but since she was of weak disposition [she was weak and petite] (kisā, -dhātu, kattā) [of little flesh and blood,] [of thin build], she was called Kisā Gotamī.

1.2 During the time of Padum’uttara Buddha, she was born in a family in Haṁsa,vatī, where people heard the Buddha teaching the Dharma. One day, [when she reached the age of discretion,] having seen the Teacher establishing a nun as the foremost of those (nuns) who wore coarse robes, Gotamī, too, did acts of merit, aspiring to the position.

1.3 For a hundred thousand world cycles, she was reborn [wandered in samsara] amongst the devas and humans. After that, when the Buddha had arisen in this world, she was born into a destitute family.

---

49 Comy notes that through spiritual friendship (viz, meeting with the Buddha) by chance, she attains nirvana, the death-free (ThīA 179).
50 Be Ce Ee so; Se ariyo ʿṭhaṅgiko.
51 Be Ee Se so; Ce asaka,gāmi: a + saka, “not belonging to oneself” (CPD).
52 Be avekkhiṁ ʿham; Ce Ee so; Se avekkhi ʿham.
53 Be Ce so; Ee Se has me instead.
54 Be Ee so; Ce kisajā gotamī.
55 Be Ce vimuttī, cittā; Ee Se so.
56 Be Ee Se so: bhanī iti; Ce bhanīti;
57 For Eng tr, see Bode 1893.
58 At DhA 26.12/4:156, the Buddha speaks to Sakka in praise of Kisā Gotamī’s wearing rag-robes. Here, I have freely used Burlingame’s tr (1921, DhA:B 3:285 f), giving my own rendition where I think his otherwise excellent tr is either outmoded or unclear, and filling in any omission.
59 Dhātu here lit tr as “humour” (Vism 485).
60 Appa,mainsa,lohitatāya, SA 1:190.
61 Kisa,sarīratāya, ThīA 174.
62 The 10th of the 24 Buddhas before our Gotama Buddha (B 11/34-36; BA 190-198).
63 ThīA 174.
64 A 1:25.

http://dharmafarer.org
When she came of age, she married into another family. There they treated her (badly) as “the daughter from the destitute family.”

2 Gotamī and the landowner’s son

2.2 It is said that once in Savatthī, a family’s wealth of 80 million all turned into charcoal. Not discarding what has turned into charcoal, the landowner thought, “Surely, there will be someone with merit, and by that merit, this will be restored to its original state.” He (collected the charcoal and) filled the silver and gold pots full, set them up in his shop and sat down near them.

2.3 Now a daughter from a destitute family, taking with her half a masaka [small coin] thought, “I will get wood and vegetable.”

2.4 As she was going along the street, she saw the landowner, and said, “There is so much wealth in your shop; how much more there must be in your house!”

2.5 “What do you see, woman, that makes you speak thus?” “This silver and gold.”

2.6 “This must be the person of merit,” he thought, and asked her about her background. Having set in order the goods in his shop, he went to see her parents, and said, “There is in our house a boy who has come of age. Give this girl to him.”

2.7 “Sir, what kind of joke are you playing on the poor?” “Friendly intimacy only comes with hardship. Take her. Let her be the landlady!” So he brought her home (to marry the boy).

3 Gotamī’s denial

3.1 In due course, when she gave birth to a son, they accorded her proper respect. But when the boy was old enough to run about and play, he died. Sorrow arose in her.

3.2 She thought: “I was denied wealth and honour in this house, but since the birth of my son, I have received respect. These folk may even seek to cast my son away.”

---

65 At this point, SA 1:190 inserts the episode of the landowner (Kutumbīka) whose wealth of 80 million (asiti,-koṭi,dhana) turned into charcoal. Apparently, Buddhaghosa here borrows from DhA: see n9 above on Samanta,-pāśādikā. The SA version gives more details of Gotamī before her awakening and only briefly mentions events leading up to her arhathood.

66 Duggata,kulassa dhīṭā.

67 This section is from SA 1:190 f.

68 SA 1:190 f concludes the rest of the story thus:

On account of living intimately (samvāsam anvāya) (with the landlord’s son), she bore a son. When the son was able to run around on his own feet, he died. Having gone to a great family, misfortune arose in the family, she thought, “This loss of a son has come upon me!”

As a result of the profound sorrow arising from her loss, she prevented the son’s funeral rites, took the dead body and wandered about aimlessly in the city.

One day, she walked into the great road of the Buddha, the One with the Ten Powers, and before him, she said, “Blessed One, give me medicine for the sake of my son’s health.”

“Go into Savatthī, and look around until you find a house where no one has died. Ask for mustard seeds from them. That would be the medicine for your son.”

She entered the city went to the neighbouring houses as instructed by the Blessed One, wandering about, asking for mustard seeds from house to house.

“But this, they say, is the nature of things for everyone, not just for my son.”

Leaving the corpse in the mortuary (? sālāyani), she asked for the going forth.

“Let her go forth!” said the Teacher, and sent her to the nuns’ quarters. In the tonsure hall she attained arhathood.

69 Sok’ummādo uppajjī, ThiA 174.

70 ThiA 175.

71 Hata,lābha,sakkāra, perhaps also contextually translatable as “failed to receive honour.”
3.3 Taking her son on her hip, she went from door to door, saying, “Give me medicine for my son!”
3.4 Wherever she went, people she met told her, “We have never heard of any medicine for the dead.” So saying, they clapped their hands and laughed. She simply knew not what they had said.

4 The wise man

4.1 Now a wise person, seeing her, thought, “This woman must have been driven out of her mind by the sorrow for her son. But as regards the medicine for her, there is no one else who would know, except the One with the Ten Powers.”
4.2 So he said to her, “Woman, as for the medicine for your son, there is no one else who knows, except the One with the Ten Powers, the foremost individual in the world with its devas, who resides at the vihara before us. Go there and ask him.”
4.3 She thought, “This person speaks the truth.” Taking her child, she went to the Tathāgata who at that time was seated on the Buddha-seat.
4.4 Standing at the edge of the congregation, she said, “Blessed One, give me medicine for my son.”

5 The mustard seeds

5.1 The Teacher, seeing her spiritual disposition [her readiness for conversion], said, “You have done well, Gotamī, in coming here for the medicine. Go into the city, bent on your goal, walk around the whole city, and from whichever house where no one has died fetch mustard seeds.”
5.2 With joyful heart, she entered the city, and at the very first house, said, “The One with the Ten Powers bids me fetch mustard seeds as medicine for my son. Give me mustard seeds!”
5.3 “Here! Gotamī,” they said, and brought it and gave to her.
5.4 “I cannot just take it like that. Has anyone died in this house?”
5.5 “What are you saying, Gotami! It is impossible to count the dead here.”
5.6 “In that case, alas, I cannot take it. The One with the Ten Powers tells me that I cannot take mustard seeds from a house where anyone has died.”
5.7 In the same way, [she went to the second house;] she went to the third house. [Then, by the Buddha’s power, she was free of madness, her mind restored.]

72 “The One with the Ten Powers,” dasa, bala or more fully dasa, bala, nāṇa. The 10 powers are: (1) knowledge of the possible and the impossible (ṭhānāṭhāna nāṇa), such as in the analysis of karma (M 57, 135, 136), and the possibility regarding the realm, circumstances, time and effort, all of which would impede or reinforce the result; and also the cause of karma, etc; (2) knowledge of the result of karma (kamma, vipāka nāṇa); (3) knowledge of the way leading to all destinies and goals (sabbattha, g viminī, patipadi); (4) knowledge of the world with its various elements (nānā, dhātu nāṇa) (M 115.4-9; 3.62 f); (5) knowledge of the different dispositions of beings (nānādhimuttika nāṇa); (6) knowledge of the maturity level of beings in terms of faith, energy, mindfulness, concentration and wisdom (indriya, paropariyatta nāṇa) (Vbh §§814-827); (7) knowledge of the defilements, cleansing and emergence in the cases of the meditations, liberations, concentrations and attainments (jhanā 'ādi, sankiles 'ādi nāṇa); (8) knowledge of the recollection of (his own) past lives (puddie, nivāsāmussati nāṇa); (9) knowledge of the passing away and arising of beings (according to their karma) (cutupāpāta nāṇa); (10) knowledge of the destruction of the mental defilements (āsava-k, khaya nāṇa) (M 1:69; A 5:33; Vbh 336). See Mahā Sihanāda S (M 12.9-20/1:69-71) for details.
73 “At the vihara before us,” dhura, vihāre. The word “vihara” is found in the Merriam-Webster Third New International Dictionary.
74 “Bent on your goal,” koṭito paṭṭhāya.
75 Thā 175 mentions both the second and third houses: dutiya tatiya gharan gantvā. From this omission, it is likely that Buddhaghosa wrote the Thā version first, and in assuming the details, inadvertently fails to mention “the second house” in the AA version. Of course, the reverse is also possible, that he made the omission first, but then rectified it in the Thā later.
5.5 Then she thought,
“This whole city must surely be like this! In his goodness and compassion, this must have been seen by the Buddha!”

6 Gotamī awakes to the truth

6.1 Overcome with samvega, she went outside of the city, heading for the charnel-ground, holding her son in her arms. Then she said, “Dear little son, I thought that you alone have been overtaken by this thing called death. But you are not the only one death has overtaken. This is the law common to all mankind.”
6.2 So saying, she left her son in the charnel-ground.
Then she uttered the stanza:

6.3 This is not the nature [dharma] of a village, nor the nature of the market-town,
Nor even the nature of any single family—
But of all the world with its devas,
This indeed is the only truth [dharma]: that of impermanence. (Ap 22.28/566)

6.4 Now, having said this, she went outside of the city. Then the Teacher said to her,
“Gotamī, did you get the mustard seeds?”
6.5 “Bhante, I am done with the business of the mustard seeds! Only give me refuge [support].”
6.6 Then, the Teacher uttered to her this stanza in the Dhammapada:

The man who is intoxicated by sons and cattle, whose mind is distracted,
Death carries him off, like a great flood sweeps away a sleeping village. (Dh 287)

6.7 At the end of (the utterance of) the stanza, even as she stood right there, she became a streamwinner.
6.8 She requested the going-forth and the Teacher consented to her going-forth.
6.9 She thrice circumambulated the Teacher, keeping him to her right, saluted him, and, having gone to the nuns’ quarters, received the going forth and higher ordination.
Not long after her ordination, practising meditation by way of wise attention, she cultivated insight.
6.10 Then the Teacher, appearing in a radiant form (before her), uttered this stanza,

And if anyone were to live for a hundred years, not seeing the death-free state,
It is better living for just a day, seeing the death-free state. (Dh 114)

76 ThīA 175.
77 “Samvega” (saṁvega), “sense of urgency,” is closely associated with spiritual “seeing” (dassana), a close encounter with reality. The Pali-English Dictionary defines it as “agitation, fear, anxiety; thrill, religious emotion (caused by contemplation of the miseries of the world).” It is one of the most powerful of Buddhist terms that refers to a sort of spiritual crisis that results from directly perceiving the truth. For a lay person, this usually results in dislillusionment with worldly life, often leading to renunciation, whereas in the case of a monastic, it urges him to exert more energy in spiritual practice until the goal is attained. For a discussion, see Mahā Parinibbāṇa S (D 16), SD 9 (7).
78 This is an example of an apostrophe, ie, addressing an absent or imagined audience, a sort of soliloquy.
79 Niṭṭhitāṁ bhante siddhatthakena kammaṁ, patiṭṭhāṁ pana me dethāti ṛha. “Refuge [support],” patiṭṭhāṁ, 2 sg acc of patiṭṭhāṁ, from pati + ṛtha, to stand. Cf Ved pratiṣṭhā, “support, foundation, resting place, stay, ground, help, also (spiritual) helper, support for salvation”: S 1:1 (*ap-), 2:65, 3:53; Sn 173; Dh 332; J 1:149, 4:20; Miln 302;
DhsA 261; VvA 138; Pā 53, 60 (= dīpa, “island”), 87 (= dīpa), 141 (su-), 174 (su- = dīpa).
80 “Working on it,” kammaṁ karoti, lit “Then the Teacher uttered this radiance-verse.”
6.11 At the conclusion of the teaching, Kisā Gotamī attained arhathood. And becoming the most excellent (param-ukkaṭṭhā) of those resorting to the requisites, she wandered about accomplished in coarse triple robes.

6.12 On another occasion, the Teacher, seated in Jeta’s Grove and assigning ranks (of those foremost) amongst the nuns, established her as the foremost amongst the sisters (therī) who are wearers of coarse triple robes.

6.13 [And she, reflecting on what great things she had won, uttered these stanzas before the Teacher, in praise of friendship with the Master (mukha): Thī 213-223.]

---

SD 43.2d

Kisā Gotamī Vatthu

1 The prophecy

1.1 It is said that once the wealth of a sēṭṭhī, wealthy entrepreneur] worth 40 million suddenly turned into charcoal. The seth, overcome with grief, refused to eat and simply lay down on his bed.

1.2 One day, a companion visited his house and asked,

“Sir, why are you sorrowful?”

1.3 Having heard the merchant’s story, he said,

“Sir, sorrow not. [2:271] I know a way out of the difficulty, why don’t you follow it!”

1.4 “Well, sir, what should I do?”

“Spread a reed mat in your shop, pile up the charcoal on it, and sit down as if you were selling it.

Passers-by will say thus,

‘Other people would sell such things as cloth, oil, honey, or molasses, but you are sitting here selling charcoal.’

Then you should say, ‘If I cannot sell what is mine, what could I do?’

1.5 But again, someone might say,

‘Other people would sell such things as cloth, oil, honey, or molasses, but you are sitting here selling money [silver and gold].’

1.6 Then you should say, ‘Where is there any money?’

When he or she says, ‘There it is!’ you must say, ‘Bring it to me!’

1.7 The person will bring you a handful of charcoal. Take it to your hands, and it will turn into money.

1.8 Now if your customer were a maiden, marry her to your son, turn over the forty million to her, and you should live on what she gives you.

---

82 The 8 requisites of a monastic (attha.parikkhāra) are: the three robes, a bowl, a razor, a needle and thread, a girdle and a water-strainer (DA 1:206 ff; J 1:165, 4:342, 5:254; DhA 2:61).

83 Resorting to only the triple robes (ti,ci্঵arık’āṇa) is one of the 13 ascetic practices (dhutanga): for the others, see Bakkula S (M 124), SD 3.15 (1) & Āṅgulimāla S (M 86), SD 5.11 (1).

84 It is clear that Gotamī’s Therī,gāthā (Thī 218 f), referring to the loss of “two sons and a husband dead along the path,” correctly belongs to Paṭācārā’s Therī,gāthā.

85 For parallels, see Āṅguttara Comy (JRAS 1893:791-791); ThīA 63/174-176. In ThīA 218 f and the Tib version, certain episodes of the Paṭācārā story (DhA 8.12) are incorporated into the Kosā Gotamī. For other refs, see DhA:B 2:257 n1.

86 This episode of wealth turning into charcoal is also found at SA 1:190 f. See W Pruitt (tr), Commentary on the Verses, Oxford: Pali Text Society, 1998:222-224.
1.9 But if the person were a youth, marry him to your daughter as soon as she reaches marriageable age, turn over the forty million to him, and you should live on what he gives you.”

1.10 “A good plan, indeed!” said the seth. [272]
So he piled up the charcoal in his shop, and sat down as if he were selling it. People who came along said thus,
‘Other people would sell such things as cloth, oil, honey, or molasses, but you are sitting here selling charcoal.’

Then he said, ‘If I cannot sell what is mine, what could I do?’

2 Kīsā Gotamī
2.1 Now there was a certain maiden, the daughter of a poverty-stricken family. Her name was Gota-mī, but by reason of the leanness of her body she was generally known as Kīsā Gotamī [Lean Gotamī].
She was running an errand, and came to the shop door.
2.2 She said this,
“My good sir, other people would sell such things as cloth, oil, honey, or molasses, but you are sitting here selling money.”
2.3 “Girl, where is there any money?"
“Right here where you are sitting!”
2.4 “Hand it to me, daughter (āmmā)!”
She took a handful of the charcoal and placed it in his hands. And when it filled his hands, it turned into money.
2.5 Then the seth said to her, “Where is your house, maiden?”
She said, “Such and such, sir.”
2.6 The seth, perceiving that she was unmarried, married her to his own son, putting the 40 million in her charge. Everything turned into money!
2.7 In due course, she was with child. After ten lunar months, gave birth to a son.
But the child died as soon as he was able to walk.

3 Kīsā Gotamī seeks a cure for her dead child
3.1 Now, Kīsā Gotamī had never seen death before. Therefore, when they came to remove the body for cremation, she stopped them.
She thought, “I will ask around for medicine for my son.”
3.2 Placing the carcase on her hip, she went from house to house asking, “Do you know what medicine will cure my son?” [273]
3.3 People said to her, “Woman, you must be mad to wander from house to house asking for medicine for your dead child!”
But she thought, “Surely I will find someone that knows the medicine for my child.”
3.4 Now a certain wise man saw her and thought,
“Our daughter here has no doubt brought forth a child for the first time, one who has not seen death before. I must find her some help [refuge] (avassaya).”
3.5 He said, “Woman, I know no medicine (for curing your child); but I know one who knows the medicine.”
“Sir, who is it that knows?”
3.6 “The Teacher, woman, knows. Go and ask him.”
“I will go, good sir, and ask him.”

4 Kīsā Gotamī seeks white mustard seeds
4.1 So she went to the Teacher, saluted him, and standing at one side, asked him:

---

87 Āmma (voc), a general way of addressing a girl or woman, variously tr in English depending on her status: “Mother,” “Madam,” “Miss,” “Woman,” etc. See CPD: amma & ammā.
88 “Unmarried,” asāmika, bhāvām, “of the status of one without a husband.”

http://dharmafarer.org
“Bhante, is it true, as people say, that you know the cure for my child?”
“Yes, I do know.”
4.2 “What is it that I should get?”
“A pinch of white mustard seeds.”
4.3 “I will find it, bhante. But in whose house shall I get it?”
“In whose house neither son nor daughter nor anyone else had died.”
“Very well, bhante,” she said and saluted him.
4.4 Then she placed the dead child on her hip, entered the village, stopped at the door of the first house, and asked,
“Is there any white mustard seeds in this house? They say it is medicine for my child.”
“Yes.”
“Well then, give it to me.”
4.5 They brought grains of white mustard seeds, and when they were going to give them to her, she asked,
“Madam, in the house that you dwell, has a son or a daughter or anyone not died before?”
4.6 “What are you saying, woman? Few indeed are the living; only the dead are many.”
“Well then, keep your mustard seeds: they are no medicine for my child.”

5 Kisā Gotamī learns the truth
5.1 So she wandered about in this manner, hoping and asking around. There was not a single house where she could find the mustard seeds she sought.
5.2 And when evening came, she thought,
“Ah! It is a heavy task I have taken upon myself. I thought it was I alone who had lost a child, but in every village there are more dead than the living.”
5.3 Thinking thus, her heart that was soft before with mother’s love now became strong [firm]. She left her son [in a charnel ground] in the forest. Going to the Teacher, she saluted him and stood at one side.
5.4 The Teacher said, “Did you get a single pinch of white mustard seeds?”
“No, bhante, I did not. In every village there are more dead than the living.”
5.5 The Teacher said, “You thought in vain that you alone had lost a son. But all living beings are subject to the unchanging truth, thus:
The king of death, like a great flood, sweeps away into the sea of ruin all those beings with a weak mental disposition.”
5.6 Teaching her the Dharma, he uttered this stanza:

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{Tañ̄i putta, pasu, sammattai \quad & \text{vyāsattamanasaṁ naraṁ} \\
\text{Suttaṁ gāmaṁ mah' \u0939 \u092f'va \quad & \text{maccu dāya gacchāti} (\text{Dh 287})} \quad & \text{[= DhA 3:342]} \\ \end{align*}
\]

The man who is intoxicated by sons and cattle, whose mind is distracted,
Death carries him off, like a great flood sweeps away a sleeping village.

5.7 At the end of (the utterance of) the stanza, Kisā Gotamī became a streamwinner. Many others, too, won the fruit of streamwinning and so on.

89 Acchāra-gāhana, matte siddhatthake laddhuṁ vaṭṭatāti. “White mustard seeds,” siddhatthaka (Skt siddhārtha-ka), also siddhatth (Ap 2.22.24/2:564; ThA 181; J 3:225, 6:537; DhA 2:273); siddhattha is also the Buddha’s personal name, some explained as siddha (accomplished) + attha (purpose, wish), ie, “wish-fulfilled, mission accomplished”. Also sāsapa (Skt sāsapa) (S 2:137, 4:464; A 4:170; J 6:174; DhA 1:107, 2:51, 4:166; Vism 306, 633; PVA 198). Mustard power (sāsapa, kuṭṭa) is mentioned in the Vinaya (V 1:205, 2:151).
90 Mām ‘eva putta mato ‘ti saññam akāśin, lit “I had the notion, ‘Only my son is dead!’”
91 Laddha te ek ‘acchāra, mattā siddhatthakāti.
93 “Those with a weak mental disposition,” aparipuṇṇa ‘ajjhāsaye.

http://dharmafarer.org
5.8 Kisā Gotamī requested the going-forth from the Teacher, who instructed that she go forth in the presence of the order of nuns. After she had obtained her ordination, she was known as the elder nun (therī) Kisā Gotamī.

6 Kisā Gotamī’s awakening

6.1 One day, it was her turn to light the lamp in the uposatha [consecrated convocation] hall. Having lit the lamp, she sat down and observed the tongues of flame, some flaring up, others flickering out.94 She took this for her subject of meditation, reflecting thus:

6.2 “Even so it is with beings: some here flare up, while others flicker away. Only those who have reached nirvana no more arise.”

6.3 The Teacher, seated in his fragrant cell, sent forth a radiant image of himself, and seated as it were right before her, showing the connection, said,

6.4 “Even as it is with the flames, so it is with living beings here: some flare up, while others flicker away. Only those who have reached nirvana no more arise. Therefore, better is the life of one who lives for but a moment, but who sees nirvana, than those who live a hundred years, not seeing nirvana.”

6.5 Then he taught her the Dharma, uttering this stanza:

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{Yo ca vassa, sataṁ jīve} & \quad \text{apassāṁ amaṭāṁ padaṁ;} \\
\text{ekāham jīvantam seyyo} & \quad \text{passato amaṭāṁ padan’ti} \end{align*}
\]

(Dh 114) [= DhA 3:431]

And if anyone were to live for a hundred years, not seeing the death-free state, it is better living for just a day, seeing the death-free state.

6.6 At the conclusion of the teaching, Kisā Gotamī, even as she sat right there, attained arhathood together with the analytic insights.96

— — —

Bibliography

Rhys Davids, C A F (tr)

94 In the story of Patācārā, she “realizes that the point of the light going out is like the moment of awakening” (Thī 112-116, 218 f; AA 552-560; DhA 8.12/2:260-270; ThīA 108-112. See DhA:B Intro §27, Synoptical Table & p50.)

95 Evam nibbānam apassatānam vassa, sataṁ jīvanato nibbānaṁ passantassa khaṇa, mattam pi jīvantam seyyo ti.

The last 2 padas can also be rendered thus: “Therefore, better is the life of one that sees nirvana, even for just an instant, than those who live a hundred years, not seeing nirvana.” Cf Thī 112-116 & Dh 113 (in connection with Patācārā).

96 “Analytic insights,” patīsambhidā, discriminative knowledges, ie, (1) ~ of meanings [consequences] (attha- patīsambhidā); (2) ~ of dharmas [ideas, mental states; causes] (dhamma- patīsambhidā); (3) ~ of language (nirut-tī,patīsambhidā); (4) ~ of wit [perspicuity (in knowledge and expression)] (patībhāna, patīsambhidā) (A 2:160; Pm 1:119). Defined at Vbh 293 & Vism 440. 3 kinds (1, 3, 4) at Vbh 297.

http://dharmafarer.org

1937  See 1909.

Rhys Davids, C A F; & K R Norman (trs)

